TESTING

REMEMBER:

Testing has its limitations. A negative test today could be a positive test tomorrow. Testing does not replace the need to wear masks, social distance, and practice good hygiene.

Individuals are advised to get tested 3 to 5 days after possible exposure to reduce the likelihood of getting a false negative.

If you get tested one or two days after exposure, there is a greater chance that even if you are infected with the virus, you will produce a negative result.
