To enter Phase One:

- Observe a consistent downward trend in new cases for a two-week period
- Health care system must be able to treat everyone who needs care without the use of Crisis Standards of Care

Building a Contact Tracing Force

- Today, DC Health has about 65 contact tracers and about 70% of confirmed cases have been traced.
- We are in the process of building a team of more than 200 contact tracers.
- Based on current projections, when we move into Phase 1, DC will need approximately 900 contact tracers.

IDENTIFY, ISOLATE, TRACE, QUARANTINE, CONNECT

- Identifying contacts starts with identifying the virus.
- In the coming weeks, with the addition of a new instrument, we will double our testing capacity at the Public Health Lab.

Today, facilities across DC have enough platforms to run nearly tests each day.

3,700

We have a once-in-a-generation opportunity to not just reopen our city, but to build a more equitable DC.

We will need to be measured, data-driven, and deliberate to ensure a safe and sustainable return.

Reopen DC is about working together as a community to reopen Washington, DC in a way that is safe and sustainable. Together, we will create a plan that is based in science and tailored to the needs of our community.

Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health will advise the Reopen DC Advisory Group. The advisory group will have 12 committees and their work will be guided by the report “Public Health Principles for a Phased Reopening During COVID-19: Guidance for Governors.”

- Co-chairs
- Equity, disparity reduction, vulnerable populations
- Public health innovation and workforce
- Transportation and infrastructure
- Open spaces and recreation
- Education and childcare
- Gov. ops., public safety, and criminal justice
- Faith, arts, culture, hotels, and entertainment
- Restaurants and food retailers

Today, we are sending the updated Comprehensive Plan to the DC Council, and the goal is to pass it this year.

The Comprehensive Plan can help guide the District as we recover in a way that works for current residents and future generations of Washingtonians.

It is more important than ever that our city has a positive, long-term vision that reflects our DC values.
